National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment
A series of low pressure systems will bring mild and moist air to Wales along with some strong winds. This will lead to some large rainfall accumulations over the high ground of the country with over 80 mm possible over the peaks during Monday and Tuesday. Following the wet November, particularly in the north, the ground is saturated and rivers are expected to rise in response to the rainfall with a low risk of flooding. Whilst lowland areas are expected to see much smaller rainfall amounts, as the water moves downstream through the river network further areas of flooding are possible.

There is some uncertainty around the behaviour of these individual weather systems and so the persistence of the rainfall. This alert is likely to be updated in the coming days.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Rain

Valid from 00:15 on Mon, 30th Nov 2015 until 23:45 on Tue, 01st Dec 2015

Rain is expected to move northwards across Wales from early on Monday with the largest rainfall totals over high ground. This will persist over the high ground through Monday and Tuesday though varying in intensity. With this following the wet November, particularly over North Wales, the ground is saturated and rivers are expected to rise in response to the rainfall.

Please be aware of the potential for disruption from flooding, even away from the heaviest rainfall as the water moves through the river network.
